PRACTICE PAPER · MARK SCHEME

1 hour 30 minutes

Original texts written for practice. This is not an HKEAA past paper and it is not a live examination script.

INSTRUCTIONS

There are two parts, A and B. Attempt ALL of Part A. Then attempt EITHER Part B1 (easier) OR Part B2 (more difficult).

Candidates attempting Parts A and B2 can be awarded the full range of levels. Level 4 is the highest level attainable by candidates attempting Parts A and B1.

Write your answers in the spaces provided. Answers written in the margins will not be marked.

For multiple-choice questions, choose one letter only. For True / False / Not Given, write T, F or NG. A tick is not a substitute for NG.

The total for the parts you attempt is 84 marks: Part A 42 marks, plus Part B1 or Part B2 42 marks.

You are advised to spend about 45 minutes on Part A and about 45 minutes on the Part B you choose.

Name _____

Class _____ Date _____

I am attempting B1 ☐ B2 ☐

MARKING

Part A is compulsory and is worth 42 marks. Candidates then do either Part B1 or Part B2, each worth 42 marks. The paper total for the parts a candidate attempts is 84.

In the live HKDSE, candidates who attempt Parts A and B2 can be awarded the full range of levels. Level 4 is the highest level attainable by candidates who attempt Parts A and B1. B1 raw marks are statistically equated to the B2 scale before they are added to Part A. This practice paper records raw marks only. Do not invent an equated score.

Award marks for the required content. Do not deduct marks for grammar or spelling unless the answer cannot be understood, or the question says the word must be taken from a named paragraph. Those words must be spelled as in the text.

In the mark scheme, // separates acceptable alternatives. Award the points in the order the candidate wrote them, and stop when the question's mark limit is reached. Extra points beyond the number asked for are not marked.

For True / False / Not Given, accept T, F and NG. A tick or a cross cannot stand in for NG. One letter only; two letters score 0 for that statement.

For multiple choice, one letter only. Two letters score 0.

A one-word answer must come from the paragraph or text named in the question, not a synonym copied from another paragraph.

An answer that copies a whole sentence when the question asks for one word, or for an explanation in the candidate's own words, scores 0 for that point.

PART A

Read Text 1 and answer questions 1–24. (42 marks)

Text 1 · Keeping the Glow

[1] From the street, Leung's workshop looks closed. The metal shutter is down to chest height, and the only light is a pink tube bent into the shape of a goldfish. Step under the shutter, though, and the room is busy. Glass tubes lie on a wooden bench. A gas burner hisses. Mr Leung, who has bent neon in Sham Shui Po for forty-one years, does not look up when visitors enter. "If you are here to take a photo, stand by the wall," he says. "The floor is for working."

[2] Neon is not paint and it is not a sticker. A sign-maker heats a glass tube until it is soft, then bends it, freehand, into letters or pictures. The tube is filled with a gas that glows when electricity passes through it. Different gases give different colours. Leung still mixes the gases himself. He keeps the recipes in a notebook that has no cover. "A machine can copy a shape," he says. "It cannot decide when the glass is about to break."

[3] The shop used to supply restaurants across Kowloon. In 2012 Leung employed five people. Then landlords raised rents, and restaurants replaced tubes with printed light boxes, which are cheaper to hang and easier to repair. By 2019 only Leung and one assistant remained. The assistant left for a delivery job that paid more. For two years Leung worked alone. He thought he would lock the door when his hands got too stiff to hold the burner.

[4] Mei Wong found him by accident. She was a design student looking for a typeface that did not look as if a computer had drawn it. A teacher sent her to the goldfish sign. She asked for a two-week placement. Leung said no, then watched her sweep the floor without being asked, and said she could stay if she did not touch the burner. She touched it on the fourth day. He shouted. She came back the next morning. That was three years ago. She is now his only apprentice, and she is paid a trainee wage that she tops up with weekend shifts in a café.

[5] Not everyone who visits wants a sign. Tour guides bring groups who stay for twelve minutes. They praise the "dying art" and leave. Leung hates the phrase. "I am not dying," he told one guide. "I am working." Mei is more patient with the cameras, because the videos sometimes bring a real order: a cha chaan teng in Tai Po, a bookstore in Central, a clinic that wanted its name in both Chinese and English. Those orders keep the gas bottles paid for. They do not, Leung admits, replace the restaurant contracts he lost.

[6] There is also a fight about the building. The landlord has applied to redevelop the block. A residents' group has asked the government to list the workshop as a place of cultural interest. Leung has not joined the group. "If they save the shop but not the rent," he says, "they have saved a room." Mei has joined. She thinks a listing might buy them time to train two more apprentices. Leung thinks time without orders is just a slower way to close.

[7] On a Tuesday in March the goldfish flickered and went dark. A wire had cracked. Mei climbed the ladder while Leung talked her through the repair from the pavement, because his knee would not take the climb. A small crowd filmed them. When the fish glowed again, people clapped. Leung waved them away. Back inside, he wrote the repair in the coverless notebook, on a page Mei had numbered because the old pages had none. "You number things when you expect someone else to read them," she said. He did not answer, but he did not rub the number out.

[8] The redevelopment decision is due in June. Mei has started an evening class for secondary students, six places, paid for by a design museum. Leung refused to let the class use the burner. They bend plastic tubes instead, which do not glow. "They can learn the shape," he says. "The fire can wait." He has not said what he will do if the block comes down. Mei has. She has priced a smaller unit in an industrial building in Kwai Chung. The rent is lower. The street, she knows, will not see the goldfish from a bus. Leung has not said yes. He has started leaving the notebook on her side of the bench.

Text 2 · Notice: The Pier Shelf

[1] The Pier Shelf opens on 1 April at Sai Wan Ho Ferry Pier. Anyone may take one book and leave one book. You do not need a card. The shelf is open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day, including public holidays. Books must be clean and complete. Textbooks, magazines and library books are not accepted. Volunteers check the shelf at 8 p.m. Wet or torn books are removed.

[2] If you want to help, email pier.shelf@example.com. The first volunteer briefing is on 20 March at 4 p.m. in the pier office. Children under 12 should come with an adult. The shelf is paid for by the District Council this year. Next year's funding has not been confirmed.

Text 3 · She counts the books in a red exercise book

[1] Mrs Chan, 70, started the idea after she saw books left on the seats of the ferry. She used to teach Primary 3. She lives ten minutes from the pier and walks there every morning. "People already wait," she says. "They might as well read."

[2] She bought the first shelf with her own money. It cost $600. Her grandson, a university student, built a small roof so rain would not soak the books. He did not take any money for the work. Last month 140 books were taken and 126 were left. Mrs Chan is pleased, but she worries about the gap. "If people only take, the shelf will be empty by summer." She writes the numbers in a red exercise book. She does not put the numbers online. "I am not making a report," she says. "I am just watching."

Text 4 · Comments

[1] Alex: I took a cookbook and left a novel. The shelf was tidy. I will come back after work on Thursdays.

[2] Ben: I left three textbooks. When I returned, they were gone. The notice says textbooks are not accepted, so someone must have thrown them away. That is wasteful.

[3] Chris: My daughter is 10. We went together. She finished a story before our ferry came. Please add a small stool. The only seat is the floor.

Text 5 · After Eleven

[1] Hong Kong sells itself as a city that does not close. The phrase is useful for tourism posters and less useful for anyone who lives above a row of pharmacies. Light is not neutral. A screen flashing health-product prices at midnight is not “atmosphere”. It is a commercial that you cannot switch off, aimed at people who are trying to sleep three floors up.

[2] A district council is considering a trial: from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m., non-essential shop signs would be dimmed, and outdoor screens would be muted. Essential lighting — stairwells, road crossings, pharmacy crosses that actually mark a pharmacy open for night sales — would stay. The proposal is modest. The reaction has not been. Trade associations warn of empty streets, lost jobs and a city “giving up”. Giving up, in this argument, means a shop looking less like a casino for eight hours.

[3] The economic claim is worth taking seriously, and then measuring. Shop owners say bright signs pull in late customers. Some do. Convenience stores and pharmacies with night staff have a reason to be seen. A wedding-card shop does not sell many albums at 1 a.m., and neither does a tutorial centre. Their signs are not fishing for customers who are out; they are occupying the visual field because a lease, or habit, has made brightness the proof that a business still exists. Being lit is not the same as being open. The proposal asks for that difference.

[4] Critics also say a dimmer street is a more dangerous street. That can be true when the thing dimmed is a pavement lamp. It is a lazy leap when the thing dimmed is an advertisement. The trial text, which few of its angriest readers seem to have finished, keeps crossings and stairwells lit and says the police will review incident numbers after three months. Fear of the dark is being asked to do the work of a statistic that does not exist yet. If the numbers go the wrong way, the trial should stop. That sentence is in the proposal. It is rarely in the speeches against it.

[5] There is a class thread running under the noise. Residents who write to the council are often owner-occupiers with windows on the main road. Workers who finish shifts at midnight, and who rely on a bright store to feel that someone else is awake, are less likely to have written. A fair trial would ask both groups, not only the people with the time to sit through a meeting. The council’s questionnaire, to its credit, will be on paper at the pier and the wet market as well as online. Whether night-shift workers will see it is another question. A form placed at 10 a.m. is a form designed for the morning.

[6] I am not arguing for a city of early nights. I am arguing against the idea that any request for limits is an attack on Hong Kong’s character. A character that cannot survive a muted screen between 11 and 7 is a costume, not a culture. Neon of the old kind — made, repaired, switched off when the restaurant closed — was a sign that someone was there. A loop of stock footage selling vitamins to an empty pavement is not the heir of that tradition. It is a habit that has mistaken itself for an identity.

[7] If the trial fails, let it fail in public: publish the incident table, the shop takings that owners are willing to show, and the number of questionnaire replies from people who work after ten. If it succeeds, extend it beyond one photogenic street. The worst result would be a compromise that dims the signs facing the residents who complained, and leaves the rest blazing at the end of the block where the meetings were not held. That would not be balance. It would be a discount on the inconvenience of the people who already know whom to call.

25. What does the writer mean by saying light "is not neutral" (paragraph 1)? (2 marks)

Light has an effect on the people who have to live with it / it is not harmless (1). A midnight screen is an advertisement forced on residents who are trying to sleep (1).

26. Find ONE word in paragraph 1 which the writer rejects as a description of a midnight screen. (1 mark)

atmosphere

27. Name TWO kinds of lighting that would stay on during the trial. (2 marks)

any TWO: stairwells // road crossings // pharmacy crosses that mark a pharmacy open at night. Mark the first two only.

28. Explain the writer's remark that "giving up" means a shop looking less like a casino for eight hours. (2 marks)

Opponents talk as if dimming signs were the city surrendering (1). The writer thinks the real change is only that shops would look less flashy for eight hours (1).

29. Which businesses does the writer say have a real reason to be seen at night? (1 mark)

Convenience stores and pharmacies with night staff.

30. Why does the writer mention a wedding-card shop and a tutorial centre? (2 marks)

They are unlikely to be selling at 1 a.m. (1). Their signs stay bright from habit or a lease, not because they are serving late customers (1).

31. What difference is the proposal asking people to accept when it says being lit is not the same as being open? (1 mark)

A shop can be illuminated without being open for customers. // signs need not stay bright just to prove a business exists

32. Decide whether each statement is True (T), False (F) or Not Given (NG) according to paragraphs 4 and 5. (4 marks)

	T	F	NG
(1) The writer believes every dimmer street is safer.		F
(2) The proposal keeps road crossings lit.	T
(3) Three months of incident numbers for this trial have already been published.		F
(4) The writer knows how many night-shift workers will fill in the questionnaire.			NG

33. What is the "lazy leap" in paragraph 4? (2 marks)

Moving from "an advertisement is dimmed" to "the street will be more dangerous" (1), as if an advert were a pavement lamp (1). One side only = 1.

34. Which idea, present in the proposal, is rarely heard in the speeches against the trial? (1 mark)

The trial should stop if the incident numbers go the wrong way.

35. Who often writes to the council, and who is less likely to have written? (2 marks)

Owner-occupiers with windows on the main road often write (1). Workers who finish shifts at midnight are less likely to have written (1).

36. Why does the writer say a form placed at 10 a.m. is "designed for the morning"? (2 marks)

People who are out in the daytime will see it (1). Night-shift workers, who are asleep then, will miss it (1).

37. The tone of paragraph 6 is best described as … (1 mark)

A. nostalgic, and opposed to every modern sign.
B. a defence of unlimited advertising.
C. drawing a line between a lived tradition and an empty habit. ✓
D. undecided about whether the trial should happen.

38. According to paragraph 6, what was different about neon "of the old kind"? (2 marks)

It was made and repaired, and switched off when the restaurant closed (1). It showed that someone was actually there (1).

39. Find ONE word in paragraph 6 which means "the thing that comes next and is supposed to continue a tradition". (1 mark)

heir

40. Find ONE word in paragraph 2 which means "limited in size; not extreme". (1 mark)

modest

41. What does "It" in "It is rarely in the speeches against it" (paragraph 4) refer to? (1 mark)

The sentence saying the trial should stop if the numbers go the wrong way.

42. What does the writer say she is NOT arguing for? (1 mark)

A city of early nights.

43. In what way is the council's questionnaire "to its credit"? (2 marks)

It will be on paper at the pier and the wet market, not only online (1), so it tries to reach people in ordinary public places (1).

44. Give TWO things the writer wants published if the trial fails. (2 marks)

any TWO: the incident table // shop takings that owners are willing to show // the number of replies from people who work after ten. Mark the first two only.

45. Explain the "worst result" in paragraph 7. (2 marks)

Signs would be dimmed only for the residents who complained (1), while the rest of the block stayed bright, favouring people who already know whom to call (1).

46. Explain what the writer means by "a costume, not a culture" (paragraph 6). You should say what each word suggests, and how the contrast supports her view of the trial. (4 marks)

1: a costume is an appearance worn for show. 1: a culture is something people live with and that can last. 1: she thinks "a city that never closes" is being treated as Hong Kong's identity. 1: if that identity collapses when a screen is muted from 11 to 7, it was only a performance. Award each point once. Full copy of the paragraph with no explanation = 0.

47. Complete the sentences with ONE word taken from Text 5 for each gap. Spelling must be correct. (3 marks)

Calling a dimmed advertisement a more dangerous street is a lazy (i) _____. A character that cannot survive a muted screen is a costume, not a (ii) _____. Old neon was switched off when the restaurant (iii) _____.

(i) leap
(ii) culture
(iii) closed
